

Photograph - Video Opt-Out Form 2021-2022

Students enjoy sharing their work with an audience outside the classroom, and for many students this opportunity is a powerful motivator. The staff in our district welcomes the chance to share what's happening in Hockinson classrooms with the community.

Reporters and photographers from publications such as The Columbian, The Reflector, and The Oregonian occasionally visit to write about and photograph our students, teachers, and their classroom activities.

Our student teachers sometimes make videotapes of themselves leading teaching lessons so they can receive feedback from their professors and fellow student teachers.

Teachers may also show students how to take digital pictures of classroom activities and insert them into thank-you notes sent to parents or community members who have visited our classrooms.

Teachers may use web pages to share student work and post pictures of students engaged in classroom activities.

Occasionally, the District Newsletter publishes stories about classroom activities as well as individual student achievements which may include photographs of the students involved.

We believe these kinds of activities contribute to our school and to student learning.

Please use this form if you do NOT want your child's photograph/video image used for the kinds of purposes listed above, and return to the school office.
